By Jack Fitzpatrick

Week in Review

Pruitt confirmed as EPA administrator

- The Senate voted 52-46 to confirm Scott Pruitt as administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, just days before the Oklahoma attorney general's office is required to release emails between Pruitt and the fossil fuels industry.
- EPA employees were told to prepare for executive actions affecting the agency once a new administrator is confirmed.

Trump chips away at last-minute Obama regulations

- President Donald Trump signed a resolution blocking the Obama administration's stream-protection rule on coal mines.
- Trump also signed a resolution blocking a Securities and Exchange Commission requirement for energy companies to disclose payments to foreign governments.

Pipelines move forward over opponents' objections

- A federal judge denied a request to temporarily block construction of the Dakota Access pipeline, but left open the option for a moratorium in the future.
- A Standing Rock Sioux Tribe councilman testified to Congress that the federal government had only given the tribe superficial opportunities to give input on the Dakota Access pipeline, and that officials had already essentially settled on a route.
- TransCanada filed an application with the Nebraska Public Service Commission to construct the Keystone XL pipeline, starting a review process that could take about

What's Ahead

- Newly confirmed EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt is scheduled to address agency employees on Tuesday.
- Congress is on recess this week. When the Senate returns on Feb. 27, lawmakers are slated to vote on Wilbur Ross's confirmation as secretary of commerce and on cloture on Rep. Ryan Zinke's (R-Mont.) nomination to lead the Department of the Interior.
- Experts from the Institute for Energy Research, Brookings Institution, and R Street Institute will discuss the Trump administration's stance on energy at a Cato Institute event on Wednesday.
